The Road across the Wolds The David Hockney Trail

Welcome to this journey through David Hockney's East Yorkshire landscape. It is based on the road from Bridlington to York that Hockney travelled almost daily for three months in 1997 when visiting his seriously ill friend Jonathan Silver at Salts Mill. It was as a result of these journeys that Hockney painted his first East Yorkshire landscapes including The Road across the Wolds and Garrowby Hill.

To appreciate Hockney's Yorkshire Wolds you have to leave the main road and explore, as he has done, the many narrow by-roads that take you through a peaceful countryside with rolling hills, hidden dry valleys, secluded villages and big skies. Everywhere there are groups of trees, brought to life by Hockney, and the hedgerows that for a short time in early summer explode into glorious hawthorn blossom.

Some of the actual locations for his paintings and drawings are identified, but what David Hockney wants you to do is to really look at the landscape; a cultivated landscape brought alive by the changing seasons. It is an open landscape and the trees, alone or in small plantations, stand out silhouetted against the sky. Hockney has shown that this landscape has a beauty all through the year.

The map opposite highlights some of the key locations that have inspired Hockney's recent landscape works.

Fridaythorpe to Warter

Take the next road on the left up to Fridaythorpe and back onto the A166. Now go west and explore the landscape and villages to the south of the main road. Huggate is where David Hockney as a schoolboy worked in the fields in the summers of 1952-53. Millington is reached via the very long and curving Millington Dale, and Warter is where the Yorkshire Wolds Heritage Centre provides a great introduction to the landscape and history of the Wolds. The remarkable 50-canvas 'Bigger Trees near Warter' was painted in the open air, nearly 2 miles east of the village.

Warter to Bridlington

From Warter go via North Dalton, Tibthorpe and Wetwang to Sledmere, a favourite village of Hockney which he painted in 1997. He is a frequent visitor to Sledmere House. From Sledmere follow the Bridlington Road, the B1253 for about three miles then turn right to Langtoft and on to Kilham, location for the series of tunnel paintings and films. From here go direct to Rudston, with its famous monolith, or follow Woldgate, a prehistoric routeway that runs from Kilham to Bridlington, which is the scene of many paintings including 'Winter Timber'. Nearby is Burton Agnes Hall where Hockney painted scenes in the walled garden.

Stamford Bridge to Thixendale

Starting from Stamford Bridge, 8 miles east of York, continue eastwards along the A166, a Roman road, that takes you up Garrowby Hill. Near the top look back and you will see the view over the Vale of York that Hockney painted from memory. Go left and down to the isolated and charming village of Thixendale, a good place to access the Yorkshire Wolds Way about a mile and a half to the east on the road to Fimber, just before a road junction, are the 'Three trees near Thixendale' the subject of a whole series of paintings.

In the west of the county is the World Heritage Site of Saltaire which is home to Salts Mill, the final destination for Hockney's journey across the Wolds. The Mill is free to enter and houses the largest permanent collection of Hockney's works in the world (www.saltsmill.org.uk).

We are truly blessed to have both David Hockney and the landscape of the Wolds in our county and we hope that his guide and trail inspire you to explore the landscape that has been his inspiration and to venture out further into the county that Hockney calls home.

Welcome to Yorkshire

Welcome to the Yorkshire Wolds, the inspirational landscape behind Hockney's Bigger Picture exhibition, the undiscovered Yorkshire Wolds is one of the most beautiful parts of Yorkshire and the UK.

Days here can be spent exploring the many areas of beauty, walking over rambling hills, cycling down country lanes, taking afternoon tea in a traditional Wolds village, exploring bustling market towns, visiting galleries and grand stately homes or just relaxing in a village pub.

The changing colours of the Yorkshire Wolds landscape makes this the perfect all year round must see destination, where you'll always be assured of a warm Yorkshire welcome.
